'Packardtown's' Early Risers Wake Up To 'Assembly Line'

"Good morning, it's 6:05 ..." is a familiar greeting to Packardites and residents of the Trumbull County area, as that's the signal for the start of another "Assembly Line" Radio Show. September 4 will mark the show's fourth anniversary.

The program features, as its cordial host, Floyd Ryel, who interviews Packardites, awards the use of a car on the "DRIVE-A-GM-CAR-FOR-A-WEEK" Contest, provides information, news and lots of good wake-up music, as he gently stirs the early risers of "Packardtown."

Over 650 Winners

Since the "Assembly Line" began in 1962, over 1,000 Packardites, talking about everything from cooking to sky diving, have been interviewed by Floyd.

More than 650 employees have been winners of a new GM car for a week. Each morning, Monday through Thursday, Floyd announces that day's contest winner. However, in order that the winners can do some prior planning, Floyd reads the names of the four winners on the preceding Friday's show.

Information

From the "blue plate special" to the latest in Live Wire sports, employees are constantly informed of the latest happenings at Packard Electric.

WHHH's Floyd Ryel has hosted the show since its inception. A veteran of over 20 years in broadcasting, Floyd is a well-

GIVE GRAMPS HIS DUE

All of us, at some time during our lives, have heard some older person bemoaning the present state of things and yearning for the "good old days." This is ridiculous, of course. It's silly to make a blanket condemnation of the present and imply that everything was better in the past. The fact of the matter is that most things have improved with time.

It's just as foolish, however, to hold the belief that everything is better now, and we can learn nothing from looking backward. As in most of life's controversies, one extreme position is as bad as the opposite one.

Take, for example, the matter of pride of workmanship. Our modern world has never found a substitute for it. Remember how proud he was of every accomplishment, no matter how small, and no matter how humble his occupation? And . . . in case you're feeling sorry for him . . . remember how happy he was?

We spend more of our waking lives working at our jobs than doing any other single thing. It doesn't take a psychiatrist to figure out, therefore, that if we are proud of what we achieve on our jobs, we are bound to come closer to the happiness, satisfaction and fulfillment we all want and need.

Moreover, the world will be better off. If everyone takes pride in his daily work and performs his services . . . or turns out his product . . . right the first time, all of us benefit. Next time you're tempted to short cut your job . . . next time you fail to feel proud of your contribution . . . just think how unhappy you are when you buy a new car, or a new refrigerator, or a new anything, which has a flaw caused by someone . . . maybe you . . . not taking pride in his work.

What's even more extraordinary is that this flexible cable — one of the newest products of Packard Electric — is as strong as steel cable of the same diameter and almost four times lighter.

GLASTRAN is a glass fiber rope. It is made of continuous filaments of high-strength glass, impregnated with plastic resin. Many filaments are assembled into strands, and the strands are then cabled together in construction similar to that of conventional rope. A GLASTRAN cable with a diameter of one-half inch contains one million of the basic glass filaments.

GLASTRAN fills a critical void in the structural material market. The most exciting feature of the new product is that, pound for pound, no other flexible cable or rope is as strong.

By way of illustration, a high altitude balloon tethered by steel cable could rise to a point where the cable would break under its own weight. When GLASTRAN is used for the same purpose, the problem is virtually eliminated, and the balloon could ascend to a much higher altitude.

Originally conceived by the Sea Operations Department of Defense Research Laboratories of General Motors in an effort to improve deep ocean mooring techniques, GLASTRAN has been developed by Packard Electric into a feasibly economical product with numerous commercial uses.

A few of the projected applications of glass fiber rope are: guys and catenaries on antenna systems, tethering for weather and communications balloons, moorings, long hoist cables and ship safety lines.

GLASTRAN is non-corrosive and because of its high tensile strength and high strength-to-weight ratio, cable installation time can be greatly reduced.

Recently installed as guy members on a U.S. Coast Guard antenna tower, GLASTRAN proved itself lighter and more easily handled by the steeplejack, took less time to install and, because of its non-metallic nature, increased the efficiency and range of the station.

GLASTRAN is being produced in limited quantities and sold on a controlled basis while research and marketing people carefully study its performance. Experience thus far indicates a bright future for this new Live Wire product.

GLASTRAN is being produced in sizes from 1/16 to 1 inch in diameter. Anthony Bartholomew, Plastics Laboratory, shows some of the different sizes.

Robert Martin operates a high speed strander, which is being used to twist parallel strands of fiber glass into a finished rope.

William Teglas changes a supply tube of impregnated fiber glass in the parallel stranding operation.

LUCK OR FORESIGHT? — When a solder pot exploded hurling molten solder, it wasn't a stroke of luck that John Jenkins, Dept. 1212, was wearing his safety glasses. John makes it a habit of wearing them, which in this case saved the sight of an eye.

Everyone is talking about their vacations. Packardites who recently returned are: George Wildman and his wife toured Alaska and had a most interesting trip. While there they watched Eskimos perform traditional dances and rode on a sled pulled by a team of dogs. They also panned for gold. Myrtle Sylvester spent a few days in Washington D.C. Doris Noble went to Canada. Richard Calhoun spent time at home with his family, and Carole Dunch went to Wildwood, N.J. ... Richard Calhoun and Frank Ronghi are proud fathers, each having a son.
